Guiding Principles for Applying for JGHF Grants for Special Projects

The JGH Foundation was established for the advancement of medicine, medical education and research in the fields of gastroenterology and hepatology. In particular, it fosters research, education and training in gastroenterology and hepatology within the Asia Pacific Region so as to enhance the health of communities and the quality of medical practice.

Grants for research activities (including guideline development) will be linked to a request that a resulting paper be offered first to JGH.

Value

Grant packages are determined on a merit and a case by case basis. A current guide is grants are made up to the value of USD$10,000 (some extenuating circumstances may exist).

Assessment Criteria

1. Value of the funding to research, education and/or training in gastroenterology and/or hepatology in the Asia Pacific region.
2. Value of the funding for the promotion of practice standards in areas of need in the Asia-Pacific region.
3. Grants that are likely to have a wide benefit in the Asia Pacific region are usually preferred over those that have a more limited geographical benefit (ie. a single country only).
4. Wherever there appears likely to be a leverage effect, so that awarding a priming grant or seeding fund will enable a group to obtain industry or other funding to carry out the research, education or training aim, there should be an understanding that the group will return all or a part of the priming grant to the Foundation when the external source of funding eventuates. (It is recognised that it is difficult to structure this expectation in a legally enforceable way).
5. At the completion of your project a:
  - Paper should be offered to the JGH for publication (details to be determined); and
  - 400 word report outlining how you meet your objectives should be presented to the JGH Foundation.
